BURTON's BENEFIT at NIBLO's.—The wellam requiring of this great come dian has been evidenced and rewarded during his engagement here by a succession of most crowded houses. To do justice to Burton as an actor would require more space than we can to-day devote to the subject; but in as brief terms as we can command we claim for him the prond position of the first Low Comedian of the age.
In every character he assumes he identifies himself with the pocalias trais of the individual, and as "Toodles," as "John Jence," as "Jem Bogs," as "Jack Humphries," he ceases to be Burton and becomes either of these. He casts his skin as easily as a snake; he changes from the worm to the chrysells,

Dr. Strause criticises the supernatural part of Christianity into mere mythology, and throws doubt on even the personal existence of its founder. He introduces the idea, since carried out so scientifically by Fenerisch, that Jenus we but the ideal of homonity, and therefore invested with the best virtues and philosophy which mankind, eighteen centuries ago, were also so conceive of. Strause's intellectuality is sublime. In the art of criticism he is a perfect model. Is learning, judgment and depth of thought he stands unrivaled. Just published by C. BLANCHARD. No. 27 Nasao 4.

course of litigation respecting a Book on Convent Life, and the result is also known. Though there is a great diversity of opinion respecting the injunction and its attending o'roumstances, there can be but one concerning the merits of this work, in which we have row the presente of presenting a fuller and more detailed account of the inner life of Convents or Nunneries, than we could have presented in any other form. In order to render this volume as full an exposition as possible of the abuses of which it treats, and to give publicly the facts which armit of almost immediate verification, in addition to the principal narrative

Parents and Guardians who have the most distant Farents and Controlled who have the large distant lock of sending their children or wards to these prison-houses, failedy called "Institutions of Learning," should not fail to read the palpable evidences of their criminality in entertaining such a thought, as set forth in this book—evidences convincing and undeniable. The profound sensation which these accounding revelations are destined to create, has been already experienced to some extent in the literary world, among editors who have been furnished with proof sheets of the work. They say that "it bears the unmistakable marks of truthfulness upon its ice; and yet the mind shrinks with terror from the necessity of be lieving that such horrio criminalities are practiced is Convents.

AN AUTORIOGRAPHY.

* In one 12mo, vol., neatly bound in cloth; price #1. The critics are united in their opinions about the Berar merits of this extraordinary book. They agree in pronouncing it " as profoundly interesting and as original as Miss Bruce's Jane Eyre;" " a work of unusual power;" "portrayed with rigor;" " life-like truthfulness;" " its beauty of style;" hidden charm;" "intense carnestness;" "fearless indepen dence," &c., " but."- But they are widely at variance is re Times's prediction is being verified, that it would be issued during the third week of publication. As an example, of the opinions generally advanced, we select the following:

"This work possesses an aborbing marrest. It is beyond doubt from the pen of a lady who has expert noses a full share of the world, and then compelled to bear up against adversity in warf one hideons shapes. The scene is laid in New England, and the characters are life-like, and though her narrative a feal of the characters are life-like, and though her narrative as feal of the characters are life-like, and though her narrative as feal of the characters are life-like, and though her narrative as feal of the characters are life-like, and though her narrative as feal of the characters are also find no necessity for overstraining truth. The sad reality is furneyer than faction. Occasionally perhaps the reader may differ in spinion from the hecoine, but he will no exchains a stranger than faction. Occasionally perhaps the reader may differ in spinion from the hecoine, but he will no exchains as yang this with his with her in the result."

"We consider it a very faithful atternance of the lives or many women, victims of false notions of duty, of conventionals and its thousand social restraints and tevers that have too more made women a mere append and not an individual existence. The book is a brave one and will do a good with."

"This book is a thrilling transcript of an doubted experience."

By L. M. M. 525 pp., 12mo., cloth. Price $1 25. The author says in the Preface:

"In the great world of art a rude cottage sometimes forms a pleasant coutrast to the stately mansions around it; so, like some rustic cottage among the statelier palaces of the great thought world, was this story framed; not to display any intricacy, mys-tery or regularity of plot, but with the hope that to some tear dimmed eye a few buds of beauty, a few green memories might spring up and twine around the Old West Room, and no aspho del hide among their leaves.

"In the humblest home of many a toil-worn worker, faith and Hope may scatter bright flowers, and Time plant unfading memorials; and when the weary lay them down to rest, angel footsteps linger, rediant scraph wings fan the brow, and unseen companions are trooping around them. Hours spent with Otie have given me consolation in sorrow and cheer in ioneliness.
